

Bodybuilders banned from using new Androstack...unfair advantage

When asked if bothered having Ironpower's number one selling supplement banned by all Australian and most international natural bodybuilding organisations, inventor of Androstack and managing director of Ironpower Richard Hargreaves replied without hesitation...

"Not at all...the fact is 99% of people who train with weights or play sports do it for their own pleasure. The fact that sporting organisations such as the IOC and bodybuilding contests have outlawed it is a supreme testimony to Androstacks unique position in the marketplace and extreme effect. The fuss is warranted...it's not unsafe...just unfair. But since most people never intend to compete in these organisations, it is not a concern for them.

Sure, I feel sorry for the 1% who cannot afford to take it lest they be penalised...but the rules of these institutions are drawn up to create a level playing field for all competitors...and as such it is their duty and responsibility to prevent unfair advantages. In fact I salute their admirable stance and support their decision wholeheartedly. But for the 99% of the population who are just competing against themselves in building a superior body or achieving a personal best performance, they should confidently embrace Androstacks winning formula to give themselves the Ironpower unfair advantage...naturally. In fact I urge all exercise oriented individuals to experience the boost that Andro taken only twice a week for three weeks can give them. Taken in this manner it is 100% safe, ultimately effective...and ultra-fast"
